

The Hooking Sentinel.
PUBLISHED WEEKLY.
Subscription price, $1.00 per year in advance.
Single Copies, Five Cents.
Business Cards, Five Cents each, per annum, $5.00.
Marriage announcements, notices of birth,
deaths and church and social notices,
when published in this paper, are charged at the rate of five cents per line, and are not published without charge.

THE HOOKING SENTINEL.

VOLUME 45
LOGAN, OHIO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 1886.
NUMBER 29.

The Sentinel.
LAWSON GREEN.
Editor & Proprietor.
TERMS: - - - $1.00

BOOMING IN BARAINS?

Read carefully below a few of the many bargains that can be obtained of

TRITSCHE & STIERS

Staple Department. Standard Cottons 1 cent per yard. Good weight Brown Cottons 5 cents per yard. Home made. All Wool Tilled Flannels 1 cent per yard, home made. Extra Patterns $1.25 worth $1.35. Everett Doublets 1 cent per yard worth 12.25.

Dress Goods. Such as Diagonals, House Spuns, Knicker-Bottoms, Matt's, etc. Mixed Goods, Cashmeres, Navy Velvets, Cambric Hats, and all the latest styles that can be obtained in the Eastern States, cheaper by ten per cent than can be found elsewhere.

Notions. Rushings, Cuffs, Collars, Ladies' Muffs, Under Wear, Foreign and Domestic Hosiery, Ribbons, Stamps, Pins, Trimmings, and thousands of articles undered in this line at Rock Bottom Prices.

Wraps, Wraps. Childrens' Dresses and Ladies' Wraps, in endless variety, from $1 to $10. We have received today over 100 different styles on short Wraps, such as Robes, Flannels, and Trimmings in both Wool and silk from 10 cents to $1 per yard. This is a branch of our business on which we make an especial effort, and guarantee every purchase at 25% and price.

Trimmings. We have the largest and best selected line of Trimmings ever shown in the Valley. Feather Trimmings in all colors from 10 cents to $1.25 per yard. Trimmings in both Wool and silk from 10 cents to $1 per yard. Silk Corsets and Trimmings and all the latest styles. Extra striped Velvets and all the latest styles. Extra striped Velvets and all the latest styles.

We feel that it is to the interest of all those who desire to lay in their fall supply of Dry Goods, Notions, Boots Shoes, etc., to call on us, inspect our Goods, and learn our prices before purchasing elsewhere.

October 28-11.

JOHN HANSEN,
Attorney - at - Law,
LOGAN, OHIO.
Office over Collins & Moore's Store.
April 1-13

SAMUEL H. BRIGHT,
Attorney at Law
LOGAN, OHIO.
Successor Collins & Moore's Store.
April 1-13

W. T. & B. BURMAN,
AT-ORNEY'S AT LAW,
McKenzie Block,
Logan, Ohio.
Solicitor in all cases. Collections promptly made and all kinds of legal business generally done. (Jan 21, '86)

J. H. DYE,
Physician & Surgeon,
Office with Dr. James Little,
Jan 2, 1887

DR. I. C. WRIGHT,
Physician & Surgeon
Office in City Building, corner of Main and Mulberry streets.
Logan, Ohio. (Jan 21, '86)

The Cincinnati Weekly Gazette,
(The Weekly Edition of the Commercial Gazette)
Only $1.00 a Year.
It is the leading Republican Weekly Newspaper of the West, and is published for the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin. It is a powerful and influential paper, and is read by the business and professional men of the West. It is a powerful and influential paper, and is read by the business and professional men of the West.

TARIFF.
The Hon. James G. Baine, the great Republican leader and advocate of high protective tariff in all his speeches this year in Maine and Pennsylvania, as he did in 1884, has used his utmost powers of eloquence and argument to force an issue between the Republican and Democratic parties on the tariff question. It is to the interest of all those who desire to lay in their fall supply of Dry Goods, Notions, Boots Shoes, etc., to call on us, inspect our Goods, and learn our prices before purchasing elsewhere.

might reasonably expect the same results in America. History proves that the condition of England's laboring people was infinitely worse under her protective tariff in 1789, than it is under her free trade law today. Hamilton had an eye only to the immense wealth of the manufacturers under such a system; and greatly desired the growth of such an interest in America, as a counterpoise to the growing power and importance of the people. Therefore, in so far as he was able, he dictated the first tariff act that was enacted by Congress. It is evident that Congress did not partake of his extreme views on the subject, for in the preamble of the act it is declared: "It is necessary for the support of government, for the discharge of debts, and for the encouragement and protection of manufactures, that duties be laid on imported goods, wares and merchandise." (Hamilton had sufficient influence to secure from Congress, a direct recognition by such declaration of its own power to levy tariff for the purpose of protection to manufactures; although the latter seems to have regarded this as a secondary and not a primary purpose.) The first and great object was a revenue, which is the Democratic doctrine today.

It is somewhat curious that at such an early day no mention is made of protection in the preamble of the act. The idea did not influence Hamilton or Congress. Hamilton was the author and father of the "protective" principle, and we have endeavored to show why he desired it to be adopted as a principle of government. He was also the founder and father of the old Federal party, which adopted his views on this question, as well as on all other questions of government. He favored a strong centralization of power; so did the Federal party; and so does its natural and legitimate successor the Republican party. And as a means to accomplish this, he desired a protective tariff to be laid upon the products of the country.

It is somewhat curious that at such an early day no mention is made of protection in the preamble of the act. The idea did not influence Hamilton or Congress. Hamilton was the author and father of the "protective" principle, and we have endeavored to show why he desired it to be adopted as a principle of government. He was also the founder and father of the old Federal party, which adopted his views on this question, as well as on all other questions of government. He favored a strong centralization of power; so did the Federal party; and so does its natural and legitimate successor the Republican party. And as a means to accomplish this, he desired a protective tariff to be laid upon the products of the country.

UCKERS MEAT MARKET.
In the Keller Building.
Mr. John Ucker will supply the public with all kinds of fresh meats, at reasonable prices. Meats of all kinds come from the best sources. The highest quality of meat is supplied. Call and see for yourself.
January 2, 1887

THE PEOPLE'S BANK OF LOGAN.
CASH CAPITAL $50,000.
Secured by INDIVIDUAL LIFE, $400,000.
L. A. CULVER, President.
REUBEN D. CULVER, Cashier.
Does general banking business. Office Room No. 2, Opera House. Nov 1, '86

FIRST BANK OF LOGAN
LOGAN, OHIO.
Cash Capital $50,000
J. WALKER, President
O. E. BOWEN, Cashier.
Does general banking business, receives deposits, discounts, pays and collects, and all other business. Bank in center room of the Opera House. Jan 4, '86

GEORGE W. BREHM,
Attorney - at - Law
LOGAN, OHIO.
Office in City Building.
July 1, 1887

George Fox's MEAT MARKET
Has been removed to the Brown Building.
Next door west from the Murphy Block, where he will be prepared to supply his customers with the highest quality of meats at the lowest prices. Call and see for yourself.

See Cattle
Hogs, Mutton & Veal Wanted.
Call and see for yourself.

FRANK MYERS,
Carpenter & Joiner.
Opposite (Rochester's).
Keeps a large stock of ready made boots and shoes.
Custom Made Work a Specialty.

THE WEEKLY GAZETTE
It is published at the low rate of ONE DOLLAR a year, making the price less than two cents a copy a week. It gives all the news, with every desirable detail, in decent shape. THE MARKET REPORTS are given in full, and are noted for their reliability. Reports are telegraphed daily over our special wires from all the leading cities.

THE CULTURAL DEPARTMENT
Is one of the great features of the Weekly, and is most valuable to the reader. The department is edited by those of long experience.

THE CHIMNEY CORNER
Is a department of the Weekly, devoted to the interests of the people, is very interesting and instructive.

ORIGINAL STORIES AND CHOICE SELECTIONS
With the Best Correspondence from all parts of the Globe, make the Weekly and Semi-Weekly complete.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY
Contains eight pages of eight columns each, and is printed every Tuesday and Friday. It is mailed at $2.40 per annum, postage paid. Persons who cannot take the Daily Commercial Gazette, and who want the news once a week, will find the Semi-Weekly an admirable paper.

DAILY COMMERCIAL GAZETTE
Terms of Subscription by Mail:
One Year (including Sunday) $12.00
Six Months (including Sunday) $7.00
Three Months (including Sunday) $3.50
One Month (including Sunday) $1.00
Single Copies 5 Cents
The Commercial Gazette Co., Cincinnati, O.

OUR PREMIUM LIST.
Consisting of Sewing Machines, Improved Waterbury Watches, Gold Pens, Pencils, Valuable Books, etc., will be seen in the paper. Sample copy free.

The Commercial Gazette Co.
Oct. 14, 1886. Cincinnati, O.

DISPATCH
DAILY AND WEEKLY.
Weekly Edition One Dollar a Year.
It contains all the general news of the United States, and is published for the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin. It is a powerful and influential paper, and is read by the business and professional men of the West. It is a powerful and influential paper, and is read by the business and professional men of the West.

The Democratic party is pledged to such a revision, which signifies, without going into details, a reduction of the tariff upon articles of necessity, and an increase on articles of luxury; to the end that the burden may be more equally distributed, and fall in just proportion on the rich, who are greatly favored by the existing tariff.

The two parties thus agree upon the one fact, viz: that our revenue, for the greater portion of it, must be derived from a tariff.

The dividing line as we have before said, being the object; that is, shall a tariff be used as a supposed means of protection, or as a source of revenue? This has been the dividing principle between parties since the foundation of our government.

Alexander Hamilton was the first Secretary of the Treasury under Washington. He had great abilities, and far-reaching foresight. He was a patriot in his desire of a separation from the mother country and resistance to her oppression; but he was an American in his birth, political training and his theories of government. He was a politician, a statesman, and a patriot. He was a patriot in his desire of a separation from the mother country and resistance to her oppression; but he was an American in his birth, political training and his theories of government.

Look at our own Hooking Valley for proof. Are the miners and furriers, the carpenters and millwrights, the farmers and stock raisers, the owners of comfortable and happy homes, enjoying many of the comforts and luxuries of life. This assertion is untrue. We know the facts are to the reverse, especially in this Valley. Laborers are not the owners of homes, as a rule. In very rare instances a laborer may own a humble home, but only under the most favorable circumstances, in place, wages and manner of living. The majority are living in

There are only two classes—business letters and letters which are strictly confidential. She seldom writes a business letter, but when she does it is very short, occupying about five lines on the first page of folio note paper. It is usually very stilted, and the reader feels as though she had, in writing, stood ten feet distant and used a fishing pole as a pen staff. She confines herself strictly to the rules of rhetoric, and commas, semicolons, and periods are adjusted with a painful nicety.

She never forgets to name post-office, county and State—whereas she is ahead of a good many business men—and subscribes her name with a precision that makes a man feel as though some one was fixing a nail.

In all other correspondence the characteristics of the business letters are conspicuously absent.

She doesn't trouble herself to think when writing a confidential letter—the action seems almost involuntary.

She begins at the upper left-hand corner of the first page, and the name of the person addressed is usually preceded by about four adjectives.

Line after line is written until the third page of the last sheet is covered, when the letter is closed and signed, "Your own Lina," or "Your true friend, Nellie."

Then she begins to think! There is something she has been dying to tell—what is it?

O, yes! She adds a postscript. After P. S. No. 2 has been added the page is full, and, as if in fear of a strike at the paper mills, she economizes by writing all around the margin, and turning the letter upside down, she fills the blank space above the headlines. She then overhauls it, underlining adjectives, supplying deficiencies, etc., and, after sealing the envelope, possibly puts the stamp according to stamp-division rules.

LOVES FOUNTAIN.

"It is cruel of grandpapa," she said. "It is very cruel, Henri. These old people think only of money. Why can they not let us have peace, when we could be so happy? It is such an absurd idea. You and I to marry each other! We are like brother and sister. Nothing can change that."

"But we are not brother and sister," said he, "and even first cousins marry. I have been thinking that—"

"Oh, don't, don't!" she said. "Henri, for heaven's sake, don't begin to be as bad as the rest. Be my dear brother still. It would be frightful for us to marry. Besides, one should fall in love first—should not one? Think how absurd to marry without that!"

"But I like you so much," said Henri. "Dear Cousin Lina let us think about it."

"I will not," said she. "If you desire to quarrel you can talk about such foolish fancies, not else. Of course you like me; of course I like you, and that is just why it can't be. Grandpapa ought to be ashamed of himself."

"I will not," said she. "If you desire to quarrel you can talk about such foolish fancies, not else. Of course you like me; of course I like you, and that is just why it can't be. Grandpapa ought to be ashamed of himself."

A Woman's Letters.

There are only two classes—business letters and letters which are strictly confidential. She seldom writes a business letter, but when she does it is very short, occupying about five lines on the first page of folio note paper. It is usually very stilted, and the reader feels as though she had, in writing, stood ten feet distant and used a fishing pole as a pen staff. She confines herself strictly to the rules of rhetoric, and commas, semicolons, and periods are adjusted with a painful nicety.

She never forgets to name post-office, county and State—whereas she is ahead of a good many business men—and subscribes her name with a precision that makes a man feel as though some one was fixing a nail.

In all other correspondence the characteristics of the business letters are conspicuously absent.

She doesn't trouble herself to think when writing a confidential letter—the action seems almost involuntary.

She begins at the upper left-hand corner of the first page, and the name of the person addressed is usually preceded by about four adjectives.

Line after line is written until the third page of the last sheet is covered, when the letter is closed and signed, "Your own Lina," or "Your true friend, Nellie."

Then she begins to think! There is something she has been dying to tell—what is it?

O, yes! She adds a postscript. After P. S. No. 2 has been added the page is full, and, as if in fear of a strike at the paper mills, she economizes by writing all around the margin, and turning the letter upside down, she fills the blank space above the headlines. She then overhauls it, underlining adjectives, supplying deficiencies, etc., and, after sealing the envelope, possibly puts the stamp according to stamp-division rules.

A Cowardly Groom.

CANADA, Oct. 21.—A tragedy of a remarkable character this evening prevented what was to have been a brilliant wedding. The bride couple have occupied an honorable position in the highest social circles, and the bridal preparations had been completed down to the minutest particulars. Miss Minnie Rosch, a beautiful, wealthy, estimable girl of twenty, waited at her home, 134 North State st., with nearly a hundred guests. Music, feast and clergymen were in attendance, but the bridegroom, who had left his betrothed less than two hours before the time fixed for the ceremony, failed to make his appearance. The man for whom all were waiting was Julius Lafore, confidential assistant to Schmidt & Latex, a wholesale liquor merchant. He is thirty-five years of age, a member of the Germania Maennerchor, is widely known throughout the city, and is a general favorite. Believing that some accident had befallen him, a friend at last hurried to his apartments on Chestnut street. The house was locked, none of the occupants at hand, and no sign of the bridegroom. An entrance was finally effected, with the aid of the police. In Lafore's chamber, stretched upon his bed in his wedding garments, was the bridegroom, with a bullet in his forehead, dead. Two scraps of paper bearing somewhat incoherent inscriptions were found. In the writing he complained that he had not the moral courage to proceed with the marriage. Word of the tragedy was hastily brought back to the waiting bride. An attempt was made to break the news gently, but the first intimation of the death she shrieked and fainted, while the fifty invited guests departed in confusion.

REMARKABLE FANCIES.

A perfectly frank woman in the matter of marriage is a rare thing. No matter how truthful she is in a general way, or how lovely her character, the social traditions that are in vogue train her to a certain deception. She even deceives herself. When a man has paid attention to a woman for a year or more, no one else is surprised that he proposes to her. No other woman that knows the circumstances is, in fact; but she always is.

It is suggested by a writer in the Journal of Fabrics as a remedy for the great discomforts women endure from the wetting of the bottoms of their skirts in wet weather that since hoopskirts are frowned upon by the modistes we all went back to the "patterns" of our grandmothers. "The old time pattern," it says, "had a leath or toe and a sole of wood, and stood on an oval ring of iron. They were left with the umbrella at the door. The materials might be changed, and something more than a toe cap would be needed to keep them in place, but a modern version of the pattern would be an untold saving of money and of health, to say nothing of the time now occupied in the washings and brushings that are the inevitable consequences of walking in muddy weather and the trial of temper involved in the destruction of drapery."

Women jump at conclusions and generally hit; men reason things out logically and generally miss it.

When a woman becomes flustered she feels for a fan; when a man becomes flustered he feels for a cigar.

Some women can't pass a millinery store without looking in; some men can't pass a saloon without going in.

A woman never sees a baby without wanting to run to it; a man never sees a baby without wanting to run from it.

A woman always carries her purse in her hand, so that the other women will see it, a man carries his in his inside pocket, so that his wife won't see it.

A man of fashion hates the rain because it deranges the set of his pantaloons; a woman of fashion hates it because it deranges her complexion.

Cholera is said to be raging in South America. A big hint to North America to clean up.

What's the price of sausages? "Twenty cents a pound."

You asked twenty-five this morning.

Now, do you want I had some. Yes I haven't got none I sell for twenty cents. Don't make me a reputation for selling cheap, and I don't lose nothings.

A noted medical authority recommends the following in a case of diphtheria: Four from 20 to 40 drops of a mixture of equal parts of turpentine and carbolic gold into a kettle of water, kept simmering over a slow fire, so that the air of the sick room will be constantly impregnated with the odor of these two substances.

What a miserable liar is man when he cannot believe himself.

Has thou a goodly heritage, thy responsibility as a man to thy fellowman is increased.

George Fox's MEAT MARKET
Has been removed to the Brown Building.
Next door west from the Murphy Block, where he will be prepared to supply his customers with the highest quality of meats at the lowest prices. Call and see for yourself.

See Cattle
Hogs, Mutton & Veal Wanted.
Call and see for yourself.

FRANK MYERS,
Carpenter & Joiner.
Opposite (Rochester's).
Keeps a large stock of ready made boots and shoes.
Custom Made Work a Specialty.

DISPATCH
DAILY AND WEEKLY.
Weekly Edition One Dollar a Year.
It contains all the general news of the United States, and is published for the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, and Wisconsin. It is a powerful and influential paper, and is read by the business and professional men of the West. It is a powerful and influential paper, and is read by the business and professional men of the West.

The Democratic party is pledged to such a revision, which signifies, without going into details, a reduction of the tariff upon articles of necessity, and an increase on articles of luxury; to the end that the burden may be more equally distributed, and fall in just proportion on the rich, who are greatly favored by the existing tariff.

The two parties thus agree upon the one fact, viz: that our revenue, for the greater portion of it, must be derived from a tariff.

The dividing line as we have before said, being the object; that is, shall a tariff be used as a supposed means of protection, or as a source of revenue? This has been the dividing principle between parties since the foundation of our government.

Alexander Hamilton was the first Secretary of the Treasury under Washington. He had great abilities, and far-reaching foresight. He was a patriot in his desire of a separation from the mother country and resistance to her oppression; but he was an American in his birth, political training and his theories of government. He was a politician, a statesman, and a patriot. He was a patriot in his desire of a separation from the mother country and resistance to her oppression; but he was an American in his birth, political training and his theories of government.

Look at our own Hooking Valley for proof. Are the miners and furriers, the carpenters and millwrights, the farmers and stock raisers, the owners of comfortable and happy homes, enjoying many of the comforts and luxuries of life. This assertion is untrue. We know the facts are to the reverse, especially in this Valley. Laborers are not the owners of homes, as a rule. In very rare instances a laborer may own a humble home, but only under the most favorable circumstances, in place, wages and manner of living. The majority are living in

There are only two classes—business letters and letters which are strictly confidential. She seldom writes a business letter, but when she does it is very short, occupying about five lines on the first page of folio note paper. It is usually very stilted, and the reader feels as though she had, in writing, stood ten feet distant and used a fishing pole as a pen staff. She confines herself strictly to the rules of rhetoric, and commas, semicolons, and periods are adjusted with a painful nicety.

She never forgets to name post-office, county and State—whereas she is ahead of a good many business men—and subscribes her name with a precision that makes a man feel as though some one was fixing a nail.

In all other correspondence the characteristics of the business letters are conspicuously absent.

She doesn't trouble herself to think when writing a confidential letter—the action seems almost involuntary.

She begins at the upper left-hand corner of the first page, and the name of the person addressed is usually preceded by about four adjectives.

Line after line is written until the third page of the last sheet is covered, when the letter is closed and signed, "Your own Lina," or "Your true friend, Nellie."

Then she begins to think! There is something she has been dying to tell—what is it?

O, yes! She adds a postscript. After P. S. No. 2 has been added the page is full, and, as if in fear of a strike at the paper mills, she economizes by writing all around the margin, and turning the letter upside down, she fills the blank space above the headlines. She then overhauls it, underlining adjectives, supplying deficiencies, etc., and, after sealing the envelope, possibly puts the stamp according to stamp-division rules.

He Laughed Out.

He was from the East, and if he was not an ex-detective, he had a right at least to be called a philosopher. He was buzzing around the depot with a suspicious looking young man, and making a great show of a fat wallet, and finally a special officer stepped up to him and said: "My friend, who is this young man?"

"I think he is a pickpocket," was the prompt reply.

"Where are you going?"

"To Chicago, and has just purchased his ticket for the same point."

"If you think he is a suspicious character, why do you train in his company?"

"Simply to beat him."

"How?"

"He goes to Chicago because I'm going. He means to pick my wallet between here and there. He had to scrape his pockets to buy the ticket. I have two wallets just like. About half way to Chicago I shall let him get hold of the one stuffed with paper. He will leave the train at the first station for sure. He will have no money, find no friends, and be mad enough to burst when he sees my trick. I'm just cracking my sides over the way his chin will drop when he opens the stolen wallet."

About an hour after, when the train had departed, the officer was surprised to see the joker still hanging around and alone. "Then you didn't go to Chicago."

"Yes," answered the man as he came, "that chap wasn't after my money, after all. He simply wanted my watch, and I'll be hanged if he hasn't got it! Where's the chief of police?"

"The Russian Government contemplates the employment of women in its railway service. Women, certainly excel in the management of long trains."

The maxim is an old and a true one, "All thieves die poor."

REMARKABLE FANCIES.

A perfectly frank woman in the matter of marriage is a rare thing. No matter how truthful she is in a general way, or how lovely her character, the social traditions that are in vogue train her to a certain deception. She even deceives herself. When a man has paid attention to a woman for a year or more, no one else is surprised that he proposes to her. No other woman that knows the circumstances is, in fact; but she always is.

It is suggested by a writer in the Journal of Fabrics as a remedy for the great discomforts women endure from the wetting of the bottoms of their skirts in wet weather that since hoopskirts are frowned upon by the modistes we all went back to the "patterns" of our grandmothers. "The old time pattern," it says, "had a leath or toe and a sole of wood, and stood on an oval ring of iron. They were left with the umbrella at the door. The materials might be changed, and something more than a toe cap would be needed to keep them in place, but a modern version of the pattern would be an untold saving of money and of health, to say nothing of the time now occupied in the washings and brushings that are the inevitable consequences of walking in muddy weather and the trial of temper involved in the destruction of drapery."

Women jump at conclusions and generally hit; men reason things out logically and generally miss it.

When a woman becomes flustered she feels for a fan; when a man becomes flustered he feels for a cigar.

Some women can't pass a millinery store without looking in; some men can't pass a saloon without going in.

A woman never sees a baby without wanting to run to it; a man never sees a baby without wanting to run from it.

A woman always carries her purse in her hand, so that the other women will see it, a man carries his in his inside pocket, so that his wife won't see it.

A man of fashion hates the rain because it deranges the set of his pantaloons; a woman of fashion hates it because it deranges her complexion.

Cholera is said to be raging in South America. A big hint to North America to clean up.

What's the price of sausages? "Twenty cents a pound."

You asked twenty-five this morning.

Now, do you want I had some. Yes I haven't got none I sell for twenty cents. Don't make me a reputation for selling cheap, and I don't lose nothings.

A noted medical authority recommends the following in a case of diphtheria: Four from 20 to 40 drops of a mixture of equal parts of turpentine and carbolic gold into a kettle of water, kept simmering over a slow fire, so that the air of the sick room will be constantly impregnated with the odor of these two substances.

What a miserable liar is man when he cannot believe himself.

Has thou a goodly heritage, thy responsibility as a man to thy fellowman is increased.

He Smelled the Medicine.

A bright little five-year old boy was visiting his father, who belonged to a New York regiment, in camp.

One day, as he was playing before his father's tent, he was accosted in a pleasant way by a spruce fire-drill soldier. He was accustomed to being noticed a child in camp being a great luxury, but for this soldier he showed evident signs of moving away.

"Come here, my little man," said the officer.

The disarming child replied: "I don't want to; you are a doctor; I know you are a doctor."

"You are mistaken; come here. I am not a doctor."

But the little fellow only put his head out of the tent far enough to say: "You are a doctor for I can smell the medicine on your breath."

That New York officer never received any other name afterward during the war.—(Chicago Ledger.)

Dr. O. C. Farquhar,
PHYSICIAN AND SPECIALIST,
ZANESVILLE, OHIO.

CURES—Dysentery, Stiff Joints, Paralysis, Long Discharges, Asthma, Bronchitis and Consumption (in the incipient stage), Piles, Hemorrhoids, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, St. Vitus' Dance, Fits, Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Catarrh, Head Ache, Weak and Aching Back, Neuritis, and all other Chronic Diseases. Old Sores, Scabies and all skin diseases cured by making a chemical examination of a sample of the patient's urine. The first price is the most reasonable.

My treatment for the PILES is new, pleasant, safe and certain.

My own method.

All diseases caused from secret habits, such as Venereal, Gonorrhea and Venereal Taint, cured successfully, in the most careful and reliable manner, without the use of any medicine, whose life previous to cure was miserable.

Female Diseases of all kinds successfully cured in a short time.

Dr. Farquhar will be at the Brompton Hospital, Logan, Thursday and Friday, November 4th and 5th.

Terms Cash. Prices Reasonable. Sept 11, 1886-17

Dr. J. Cresap
CUTTERS
FURNISHING GOODS.
Call and see his Stock of Piece Goods and learn his prices.
March 25, 1886-17

PIECE GOODS.
AND GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS.
Call and see his Stock of Piece Goods and learn his prices.
March 25, 1886-17

MARIETTA COLLEGE
Marietta, Ohio.
The best educational advantage of the West. Two courses of study. The first course is for four years, the second for three years. The college is located in a beautiful spot, and is surrounded by a large tract of land. The college is a member of the Association of Colleges and Universities of the West. The college is a member of the Association of Colleges and Universities of the West.

The Democratic party is pledged to such a revision, which signifies, without going into details, a reduction of the tariff upon articles of necessity, and an increase on articles of luxury; to the end that the burden may be more equally distributed, and fall in just proportion on the rich, who are greatly favored by the existing tariff.

The two parties thus agree upon the one fact, viz: that our revenue, for the greater portion of it, must be derived from a tariff.

The dividing line as we have before said, being the object; that is, shall a tariff be used as a supposed means of protection, or as a source of revenue? This has been the dividing principle between parties since the foundation of our government.

Alexander Hamilton was the first Secretary of the Treasury under Washington. He had great abilities, and far-reaching foresight. He was a patriot in his desire of a separation from the mother country and resistance to her oppression; but he was an American in his birth, political training and his theories of government. He was a politician, a statesman, and a patriot. He was a patriot in his desire of a separation from the mother country and resistance to her oppression; but he was an American in his birth, political training and his theories of government.

Look at our own Hooking Valley for proof. Are the miners and furriers, the carpenters and millwrights, the farmers and stock raisers, the owners of comfortable and happy homes, enjoying many of the comforts and luxuries of life. This assertion is untrue. We know the facts are to the reverse, especially in this Valley. Laborers are not the owners of homes, as a rule. In very rare instances a laborer may own a humble home, but only under the most favorable circumstances, in place, wages and manner of living. The majority are living in

There are only two classes—business letters and letters which are strictly confidential. She seldom writes a business letter, but when she does it is very short, occupying about five lines on the first page of folio note paper. It is usually very stilted, and the reader feels as though she had, in writing, stood ten feet distant and used a fishing pole as a pen staff. She confines herself strictly to the rules of rhetoric, and commas, semicolons, and periods are adjusted with a painful nicety.

She never forgets to name post-office, county and State—whereas she is ahead of a good many business men—and subscribes her name with a precision that makes a man feel as though some one was fixing a nail.

In all other correspondence the characteristics of the business letters are conspicuously absent.

She doesn't trouble herself to think when writing a confidential letter—the action seems almost involuntary.

She begins at the upper left-hand corner of the first page, and the name of the person addressed is usually preceded by about four adjectives.

Line after line is written until the third page of the last sheet is covered, when the letter is closed and signed, "Your own Lina," or "Your true friend, Nellie."

Then she begins to think! There is something she has been dying to tell—what is it?

O, yes! She adds a postscript. After P. S. No. 2 has been added the page is full, and, as if in fear of a strike at the paper mills, she economizes by writing all around the margin, and turning the letter upside down, she fills the blank space above the headlines. She then overhauls it, underlining adjectives, supplying deficiencies, etc., and, after sealing the envelope, possibly puts the stamp according to stamp-division rules.

There are only two classes—business letters and letters which are strictly confidential. She seldom writes a business letter, but when she does it is very short, occupying about five lines on the first page of folio note paper. It is usually very stilted, and the reader feels as though she had, in writing, stood ten feet distant and used a fishing pole as a pen staff. She confines herself strictly to the rules of rhetoric, and commas, semicolons, and periods are adjusted with a painful nicety.

She never forgets to name post-office, county and State—whereas she is ahead of a good many business men—and subscribes her name with a precision that makes a man feel as though some one was fixing a nail.

In all other correspondence the characteristics of the business letters are conspicuously absent.

She doesn't trouble herself to think when writing a confidential letter—the action seems almost involuntary.

She begins at the upper left-hand corner of the first page, and the name of the person addressed is usually preceded by about four adjectives.

Line after line is written until the third page of the last sheet is covered, when the letter is closed and signed, "Your own Lina," or "Your true friend, Nellie."

Then she begins to think! There is something she has been dying to tell—what is it?

O, yes! She adds a postscript. After P. S. No. 2 has been added the page is full, and, as if in fear of a strike at the paper mills, she economizes by writing all around the margin, and turning the letter upside down, she fills the blank space above the headlines. She then overhauls it, underlining adjectives, supplying deficiencies, etc., and, after sealing the envelope, possibly puts the stamp according to stamp-division rules.

There are only two classes—business letters and letters which are strictly confidential. She seldom writes a business letter, but when she does it is very short, occupying about five lines on the first page of folio note paper. It is usually very stilted, and the reader feels as though she had, in writing, stood ten feet distant and used a fishing pole as a pen staff. She confines herself strictly to the rules of rhetoric, and commas, semicolons, and periods are adjusted with a painful nicety.

She never forgets to name post-office, county and State—whereas she is ahead of a good many business men—and subscribes her name with a precision that makes a man feel as though some one was fixing a nail.

In all other correspondence the characteristics of the business letters are conspicuously absent.

She doesn't trouble herself to think when writing a confidential letter—the action seems almost involuntary.

She begins at the upper left-hand corner of the first page, and the name of the person addressed is usually preceded by about four adjectives.

Line after line is written until the third page of the last sheet is covered, when the letter is closed and signed, "Your own Lina," or "Your true friend, Nellie."

Then she begins to think! There is something she has been dying to tell—what is it?

O, yes! She adds a postscript. After P. S. No. 2 has been added the page is full, and, as if in fear of a strike at the paper mills, she economizes by writing all around the margin, and turning the letter upside down, she fills the blank space above the headlines. She then overhauls it, underlining adjectives, supplying deficiencies, etc., and, after sealing the envelope, possibly puts the stamp according to stamp-division rules.

There are only two classes—business letters and letters which are strictly confidential. She seldom writes a business letter, but when she does it is very short, occupying about five lines on the first page of folio note paper. It is usually very stilted, and the reader feels as though she had, in writing, stood ten feet distant and used a fishing pole as a pen staff. She confines herself strictly to the rules of rhetoric, and commas, semicolons, and periods are adjusted with a painful nicety.

She never forgets to name post-office, county and State—whereas she is ahead of a good many business men—and subscribes her name with a precision that makes a man feel as though some one was fixing a nail.

In all other correspondence the characteristics of the business letters are conspicuously absent.

She doesn't trouble herself to think when writing a confidential letter—the action seems almost involuntary.

She begins at the upper left-hand corner of the first page, and the name of the person addressed is usually preceded by about four adjectives.

Line after line is written until the third page of the last sheet is covered, when the letter is closed and signed, "Your own Lina," or "Your true friend, Nellie."

Then she begins to think! There is something she has been dying to tell—what is it?

O, yes! She adds a postscript. After P. S. No. 2 has been added the page is full, and, as if in fear of a strike at the paper mills, she economizes by writing all around the margin, and turning the letter upside down, she fills the blank space above the headlines. She then overhauls it, underlining adjectives, supplying deficiencies, etc., and, after sealing the envelope, possibly puts the stamp according to stamp-division rules.

There are only two classes—business letters and letters which are strictly confidential. She seldom writes a business letter, but when she does it is very short, occupying about five lines on the first page of folio note paper. It is usually very stilted, and the reader feels as though she had, in writing, stood ten feet distant and used a fishing pole as a pen staff. She confines herself strictly to the rules of rhetoric, and commas, semicolons, and periods are adjusted with a painful nicety.

She never forgets to name post-office, county and State—whereas she is ahead of a good many business men—and subscribes her name with a precision that makes a man feel as though some one was fixing a nail.

In all other correspondence the characteristics of the business letters are conspicuously absent.

She doesn't trouble herself to think when writing a confidential letter—the action seems almost involuntary.

She begins at the upper left-hand corner of the first page, and the name of the person addressed is usually preceded by about four adjectives.

Line after line is written until the third page of the last sheet is covered, when the letter is closed and signed, "Your own Lina," or "Your true friend, Nellie."

Then she begins to think! There is something she has been dying to tell—what is it?

O, yes! She adds a postscript. After P. S. No. 2 has been added the page is full, and, as if in fear of a strike at the paper mills, she economizes by writing all around the margin, and turning the letter upside down, she fills the blank space above the headlines. She then overhauls it, underlining adjectives, supplying deficiencies, etc., and, after sealing the envelope, possibly puts the stamp according to stamp-division rules.